

COMPENDIUM ON PLINTH AREA RATE

(Containing PAR issued upto March 2026)

DELHI DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITY

INTRODUCTION

PAR i.e plinth area rate per square meter is used for working out the construction cost of flats offered by DDA through various housing schemes.

Brief parameters used for deriving Plinth Area Rates as contained in this Compendium are as under:

In respect of new construction, the Plinth Area Rate (PAR) will be derived by dividing the total expenditure data provided by Engineering Wing on the scheme by gross plinth area including common area. The actual PAR so determined will be compared with notified PAR and the higher PAR will be used for determination of construction cost of flats. While finalising PAR, the Departmental charges loaded by the Engineering department on the total expenditure of the project will not be considered and it will be ensured that overheads (which are indirect costs of the project) have been levied on the actual expenditure of the project and no overheads have been levied on the overheads already charged on the expenditure of the project.

In respect of old inventory, the PAR will be updated on the basis of average of semi-annual CPWD building cost index of previous year. Such up-dation of PAR will be announced only once a year with the approval of Vice-Chairman, DDA.

From pre-page:-

Benefit of depreciation at the rate of 1.25% per annum on current cost from the year of construction subject to maximum of 25% may be given to allottees to whom flats from old stocks would be allotted. Date of completion of flats will be computed from the date of validity of first time costing against respective flats. However, flats less than one year old will not be considered for the purpose of benefit of depreciation. Further, for purpose of working out total disposal cost of flat, other parameters like interest for the construction period, administrative charges, etc., would be applied on construction cost arrived at after providing for depreciation, if any.
